Report:

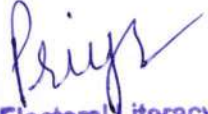

Description in (min 250 to max 800 words)

The Tecnia Institute of Advanced Studies recently conducted a successful camp at GB Road focused on empowering commercial sex workers (CSWs) to engage in the electoral process. The camp provided a platform for participants to delve into informative workshops that explained the electoral system and underscored the significance of voting. These sessions were complemented by skill-building activities designed to enhance their advocacy and public speaking capabilities. To help participants understand their rights, legal support was made available, ensuring they were well-informed. Community discussions fostered an environment of solidarity, allowing attendees to share personal experiences and support one another. In addition to these educational components, resources related to health and well-being were provided, promoting holistic support for the participants. Attendees also had opportunities to network with local political representatives, further bridging the gap between CSWs and the electoral process. As a result of the camp, many participants expressed a significant boost in their confidence concerning electoral participation.

	They reported feeling more empowered and equipped to engage in advocacy for their community. This experience not only deepened their understanding of their rights but also solidified their commitment to championing the needs and concerns of their peers. Overall, the camp served as an important step in fostering civic engagement among CSWs, helping them navigate the electoral landscape with greater assurance and purpose and proved to be a pivotal step in fostering civic engagement among CSWs, enabling them to navigate the electoral process with greater assurance and purpose, and contributing to a more inclusive democracy.
